Regulations Revised For ROPA Date, Army Prepares For July '60 Change

The Army is publishing changes to AR's 135-173 and 135-215 to implement provisions of the Reserve Officers Personnel Act which becomes effective on 2 July 1960.

The 1954 Act provides officers of the Reserve components with a statutory basis for career progression comparable to that for officers of the Regular components contained in the Officer Personnel Act of 1947.

One of the basic features in ROPA is the attritive provisions requiring Reserve release from an active status upon attaining a prescribed maximum age or completing the specified maximum service for their grade.

The maximum age provision was effective 1 July 1955 for a 5 year period, after which the maximum service provisions become effective. These arrangements parallel those in OPA which also included a five year adjustment period.

The maximum ages established were 58 for colonels and 55 for lieutenant colonels and lower grades.

In implementing these interim measures, those Reserve officers who could never qualify for active duty retirement prior to reaching the maximum age for their grade were released from active duty. This action anticipated the effects

CONTRACT INNOVATION:

BuWeps Will Tell New Structure; Flag Billet Set For Astronautics

THE Navy will announce shortly—probably this month—the structure of its new, powerful Bureau of Naval Weapons, and the names of flag officers and captains who will head major activities.

Under RAdm. Paul D. Stroop, Chief, BuWeps will put into effect a new procedure for awarding contracts. The Bureau will be responsible for about 40% of the total Navy budget.

Vital activities of the Bureau, a merger of the Bureaus of Aeronautics and Ordnance, will be handled by six major task units—one of them to be headed by a flag officer who will serve as Director of the Pacific Missile Range and Astronautic Programs.

The other five Directors, four-stripe officers, will be the Directors of Strike Warfare, Anti-Submarine Warfare, Air Defense Warfare, Support System and Logistic Support

JCS FACES RESERVE FORCES CHALLENGE

THE Joint Chiefs of Staff will not be able to evade much longer a sweeping review of the Nation's Reserve Forces structure.

That is the informed word provided THE JOURNAL at the Pentagon and at San Antonio, Tex., where the 81st General Conference of the National Guard Association was held this week.

Action at the Guard sessions is described in detail in this issue, highlighted by reverberations to controversial remarks made by General Curtis E. LeMay, Air Force Vice CofS, at the 25 September Air Force Reserve Forces Seminar and reported in last week's issue.

The Air Force will launch next week a comprehensive study of its Reserve Forces structure and the Army is holding an important session on its "One Army" concept 19 October. (see Page 4)

These actions are seen as a prelude to a full-scale Reserve Forces review by the JCS. This study will seek to establish revised requirements geared to (1) the weapons changes of the next 5-10 years and beyond, and (2) to the need for manpower economies. The study may also survey the power-packed issue of command control of all Reserve Forces, particularly possible conflicts between the States and the Federal government.

NGA President Charges General LeMay Flies "Off Course"; Reevaluation Sought

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

THE National Guard Association, whose President, Maj. Gen. William H. Harrison, Adjutant General of Massachusetts, declared that General Curtis E. LeMay, "appears to be flying off course," has demanded that the services of the Air Force Vice Chief of Staff be "re-evaluated." (LeMay Resolution, Page 3)

The bold action was taken in a resolution adopted at the 81st General Conference of the Association here. It came in the wake of remarks made by General LeMay at the Reserve Forces Seminar

(THE JOURNAL, 3 October) in which he urged a single Air Force Reserve.

"Command" Gets New ARDC Stress

Lt. Gen. Bernard A. Schriever, head of the Air Force's Air Research and Development Command, has launched a series of reorganization actions which will carry over into 1960.

Major objective, he said, is to compress the time required in the research, development, test, and engineering of new weapons in order to speed delivery to the user commands, SAC, TAC, and ADC.

Basing the Reorganization on the experience of the Ballistics Missile Division at Inglewood, Calif., which he headed until assigned to the top ARDC post in April, General Schriever intends to give a stronger accent to "command authority" in the field.

With ARDC Headquarters at Andrews AFB, Md., slated for a predominantly policy-making role, operations will be delegated to four ARDC divisions. Each division commander will have the addi-

Army-ANG And Reserve Slate Largest Exercise In '60; 530 Planes Lift Division

SAN ANTONIO, TEX. THE joint Army-Air Force exercise, Brightstar/Pine Cone III, scheduled for next year, will be "by far the largest peacetime exercise of its kind ever undertaken," Lt. Gen. William E. Hall, USAF, Commander of the Continental Air Command, reported to the National Guard Association here 6 October.

Present plans, General Hall said, call for the participation of 530 Air National Guard and Air Reserve aircraft. Primarily, it will consist of the airlifting of an entire Army division with full equipment.

If this comes about it will be the accomplishment of a feat which has long been the subject of contention in Army-Air Force circles.

General Hall said the magnitude of the exercise is such that the most taxing problem is to acquire the use of enough airfields in the area of North Carolina to accommodate the 530 aircraft involved.

"This figure may have to be lessened at a later date," the General said, "but it is currently Continental Air Command's target. A survey of all available airfields is now being made by ConAC, TAC, and the Air Force Division of the National Guard Bureau."

"Once the airfield problem is resolved," General Hall said, "and we know exactly how many aircraft can be staged and operated within a reasonable distance of Ft. Bragg, then Army requirements will be firmed up. Following this, directives will be issued and responsibilities assigned to all participating units and arrangements made for various headquarters to be set up by 1 May 1960 and both reserve and active duty personnel assigned for approximately 90 days duty prior to the exercise itself."

"My feeling and hope," the General said, "is that Brightstar/Pine Cone III will demonstrate to the public as nothing else in peacetime ever has, the true value of the Air Reserve Force."

B/G Bessell Named West Point Dean

Brig. Gen. William W. Bessell, USMA '20, has succeeded Brig. Gen. Gerald Counts, USMA '17, who has retired, as Dean of the Academic Board at the U.S. Military Academy. Development DCNO Has New Divisions

Four new divisions have been established within the Office of the Deputy CNO for Development VAdm John T. Hayward, USN.

The new divisions and their directors are: Anti-Submarine Warfare Weapons Systems Division, Captain W. H. Grovesman, Strike Warfare Weapon Systems Division, Capt. F. A. Patriarca, Supporting Warfare Weapon Systems Division, Capt. M. H. Austin, and Astronautics Development and Advanced Technology Division, Capt. F. H. Marshall.

The functions of the new divisions have been performed by a Research and Development Division which has been redesignated the Plans, Programs and Budget Division. It is directed by RADM F. L. Asworth.

A Development Plans Group has been established under Dr. Robert O. Burnett, formerly Development Coordinator for the Office of Naval Research.

Other parts of the development operation are the Guided Missiles Division directed by RADM K. S. Masterson, and the Atomic Energy Division, directed by Capt. John N. Shaffer.

RADM Charles B. Martell, is Assistant CNO for Development under Admiral Hayward.

NEXT WEEK—

THE JOURNAL staff was deployed this week on a number of field assignments which will be reported in the 17 October issue.

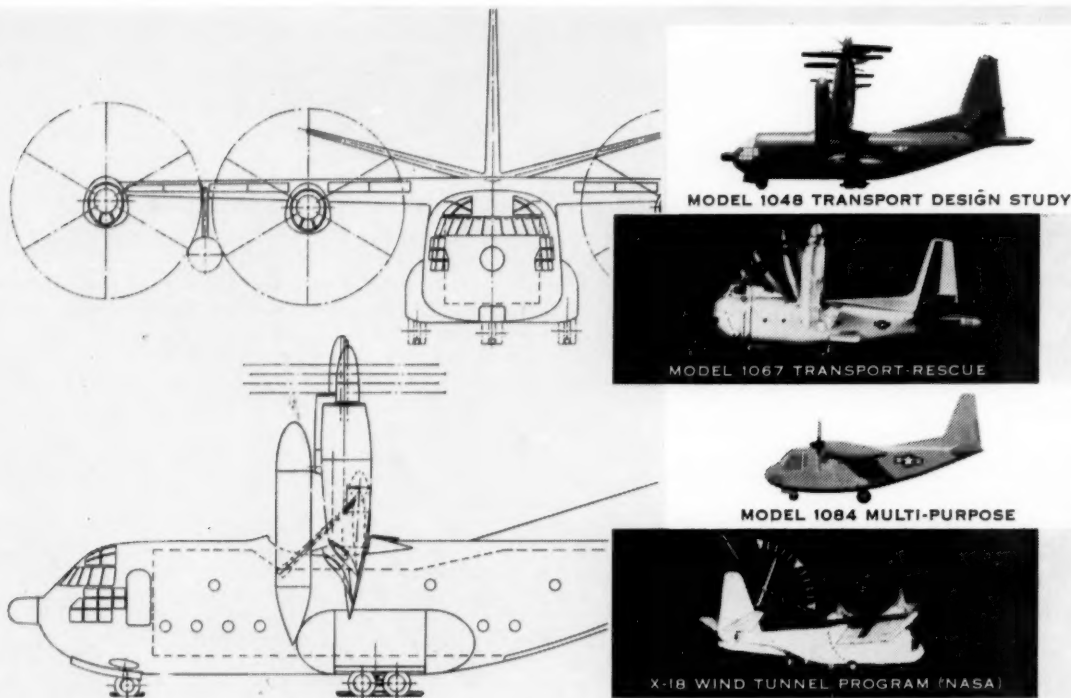

From San Antonio, Tex., will come a wrap-up on the 81st General Conference of the National Guard Association, probably covered more extensively in this week's issue than in any other publication.

At NORAD Headquarters, Ent Air Force, Colo., a JOURNAL representative was obtaining details on the reorganization of the air defense organization.

Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., will see the assignment of another reporter to cover the annual meeting of the American Ordnance Association and the spectacular demonstration of new Army weapons.

Across the border in Canada, THE JOURNAL was on hand for the official delivery by deHavilland Aircraft Company of the first Caribou aircraft to the Army.

Another highlight of the 17 October issue will be a report on the Army promotion policy to three and four-star ranks in comparison with the other Services. That article was rescheduled from this week's issue because of technical requirements.

VTOL'S MOST MATURED CONCEPT: THE TILT WING

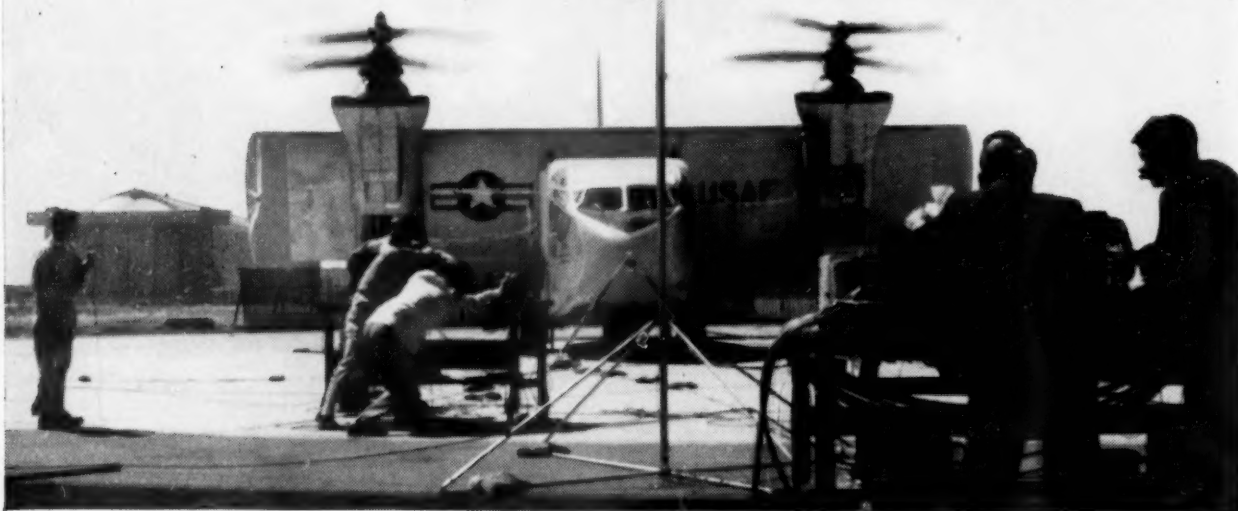

Seven years of Hiller tilt wing design study, operations analyses, and successful wind tunnel programs have continued to verify the tilt wing as the most predictable and uniformly dependable approach to higher speed VTOL.

Hiller's veteran tilt wing engineering and manufacturing team, first in industry to undertake tilt wing contracts, and having completed the majority of industry studies in the field, remain avowed champions of this VTOL approach. Their experience continues to insist that operationally practical tilt wing aircraft, large and small, are ready to satisfy the urgent military and commercial need for VTOL.

Destined to provide the most comprehensive volume of flight test data is the U.S. Air Force X-18 (below)... world's largest VTOL project. Currently undergoing preflight testing at Moffett Field, California, the X-18 is scheduled for complete flight programs in the next few months.

Guard Association Demands Reevaluation Of Gen. LeMay's "Qualifications, Usefulness"

This is the text of a resolution concerning General Curtis E. LeMay, Air Force Vice Chief of Staff, which was voted by the National Guard Association General Conference here:

"Whereas, the National Guard is always receptive to honest, constructive criticism and opposed to petty, unfounded, destructive criticism tending to mislead the American public, and

"Whereas, the National Guard has long recognized and admired the record established by the present Vice Chief of Staff of the United States Air Force as a strategic commander; and

"Whereas, news releases attribute to this officer certain remarks reflecting unfavorably upon the efficiency and effectiveness of the Air National Guard, and

"Whereas, such remarks were made publicly at a time when the Vice Chief of Staff was announced as substituting for the Chief of Staff of the United States Air Force, and

"Whereas, such remarks were not based on fact; and

"Whereas, excuses for such remarks as being mere attempts to stimulate thought are unacceptable, since stimulation of thought does not require distortion of truth; and

"Whereas, such remarks ignore the high state of immediate combat readiness of Air National Guard units which has been repeatedly recognized in official Air Force studies and reports; and

"Whereas, such remarks ignore the fact that the Air National Guard currently provides 24 ready wings of combat jet aircraft at a minute fraction of the total Air Force budget, and

"Whereas, such remarks reflect views opposed to the policies of the Commander in Chief, President Eisenhower, as reaffirmed in his statement of 2 October 1959, as follows:

"I emphasize that in this era of terrible weaponry and incredibly swift delivery systems and in a time when all America has moved from the rear echelon to the front lines in any future conflict, the continuance of the National Guard in instant readiness assumes ever greater significance to every citizen."

"Whereas, serious concern over unity and cooperation in planning for the defense of the United States is caused by public display of monumental ignorance of fact and by publication of conflicting policies at high military levels: Now

"Therefore, be it resolved by the National Guard Association of the United States in General Conference assembled this seventh day of October 1959 in the city of San Antonio, Texas, that the qualifications and continued usefulness of this officer in his present influential staff assignment be reevaluated."

To improve it further, Douglas has been selected to develop specifications for a comprehensive Material Handling Support System involving better communications, control, cargo handling and loading, packaging and air terminal design. Douglas is well qualified for this program by its more than 20 years in all phases of cargo transport. U.S. Reserves Trained "Best In The World"

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

DESPITE Russia's greater manpower and more modern weapons, the United States has the best trained military reserve force in the world, Maj. Gen. William H. Harrison, Jr., President of the National Guard Association, declared in an opening statement for the 81st General Conference of the Association meeting here 5 to 8 October.

General Harrison declared that while the Red Army has a great many more men in its reserve forces, they are not organized in units and their training does not compare with that given reservists in the United States.

While there is little organized reserve training in the Red Army, he said, it is capable of rapid expansion for mobilization and has large stockpiles of modern equipment.

The law provides for recall of trained Red veterans, General Harrison said, but this is not being done at the present time, except in the case of men with critical skills.

The great concern of many of our Army commanders today, the General said, is that the Soviet Union, while conducting aggressive research and development in missile warfare and space exploration, has not neglected research, development, and production of weapons and equipment for her conventional ground forces.

Maj. Nelson Is I.G.

Maj. George D. Nelson has assumed duties as Inspector General at Camp Wolters, Tex., reporting from the 1st Battle Group in Korea.

"One Army" Gets D/A Emphasis; All Components Will Meet At Pentagon

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

THE importance of the "One Army" concept as a major plank in Department of the Army policy was given the strongest emphasis by Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker in his address to the National Guard Association Conference here 5 October.

"There is," declared the Secretary, "an urgent necessity to increase confidence and mutual trust among all components and branches of the Army, and thus present the single image of the SOLDIER, regardless of the component to which he belongs."

To further this concept, Mr. Brucker told the meeting that he has called a conference of senior commanders of the various components of the Army to meet at the Pentagon for three days beginning 19 October. Its purpose will be to develop ideas and recommendations as to what will contribute to the accomplishment of the "One Army" objective.

"I am confident," he declared, "that all elements will approach the task with a fundamental willingness to accept the concept of the 'One Army' characterized by mutual respect and confidence among its various components parts, and a spiritual unity which will give it maximum effectiveness as a fighting force."

"It is equally important that the public understand the status of the National Guard and the Army Reserve—not separate and distinct forces, but rather components of 'One Army.' It is essential to our national security that there be the broadest public recognition of the vital mission of that 'One Army' as a major instrument of America's defense now and in the years to come."

Change Ordered In RA Requests

Current regulations require that an officer who has not been selected for appointment in the Regular Army may not reapply sooner than within one year after date of rejection notice. A change is being published that will permit an applicant to reapply within the one year waiting period if the reasons are sufficiently cogent.

Normally, however, the Army said, it is in the best interest of the officer that he wait and take full advantage of the year to improve his potential value to the Regular Army before reapplying.

Navy Selects 343 Staff Corps Officers For Fiscal '60 Captain And Commander Ranks

Staff Corps boards have named 343 Regular and active duty Reserve commanders and lieutenant commanders for four- and three-stripe ranks—165 to captain and 178 to commander.

Last year 263 were named—107 to captain and 156 to commander.

The Fiscal Year '58 boards chose 278—50 for four-stripe and 228 for three-stripe ranks.

Of the 165 picked for captain this year, there are 53 physicians, one nurse, 11 dentists, 13 chaplains, 22 engineers, two Medical Service and 63 Supply officers.

The lone Nurse named for four stripes is Cdr. Alice R. Erickson, Chief of the Nursing Service, Naval Hospital, Bethesda, Md.

Selections to commander include 42 Medical, 22 Medical Service, eight Nurse, 10 Dental, 77 Supply, five Chaplain and 14 Civil Engineer Corps officers.

In all, 16 active duty Reservists were tapped for advancement—three physicians (two commanders and one lieutenant commander), four Supply officers (two commanders and two lieutenant commanders), three chaplains (two commanders and one lieutenant commander), two Medical Service lieutenant commanders, and six Civil Engineer commanders.

Eligible for consideration were commanders with dates of rank of 1 July 1955 and earlier. Staff Corps promotion zones to captain terminated with Lineal No. 10200-00 or the next senior number.

The promotion zone to the rank of commander ended with Lineal No. 21394-35. The zone of eligibility included all lieutenant commanders with dates of rank of 1 July 1956 and earlier.

All commanders on the lineal lists, through those shown below, by Corps, have been ordered to take immediate physicals for promotion to captain: MC,

Landing Ships Change Numbers For Names

Four Navy landing ships previously known by number have been assigned names.

They are the Kodiak (LSM-161), Oceanside (LSM-175), Lakeland (LSM-373), and Raritan (LSM-540.)

They are the only ships of their type in use by the Navy now. The first two were commissioned in 1944, the latter two in 1945.

Kodiak is named for and homeported in Kodiak, Alaska. Commanding officer is Lt. Jack L. Marriott.

Oceanside, named for Oceanside, Calif., is homeported in Los Angeles, Calif., under command of Lt. Harry W. Bergbauer, Jr.

The other two LSMs are part of the Atlantic Fleet, homeported at Norfolk, Va. LSM 373 is named for Lakeland, Fla.; LSM 540, for Raritan, N. J.

Lt. James M. Hoyer is commanding officer of Lakeland. Lt. William A. Kearns commands Raritan.

Lynn E. Anthony; SC, Evert R. Sharp; ChC, Marion O. Stephenson; CEC, Arthur C. Neuman; DC, Walter G. Hillis; and MSC, Claude V. Timberlake.

Information concerning physicals for three-stripe selectees will be announced in the A1Nav reporting Line commander selections. The Line board, which met 15 September, is still in session.

"Hump" Officers Could Forfeit USCOA Rights By Early Retirement

Navy and Marine Corps officers selected for non-continuation under the "Hump" Act will lose their right to change or revoke their Uniform Services Contingency Option Act annuity plan elections if they choose to retire prior to the mandatory dates set in the act.

Normally, officers selected for non-continuation under the "Hump" Act must be retired on 30 June of the year they are selected for non-continuation or the year they complete 20 years' service, whichever is later.

They may, however, voluntarily select an earlier retirement date and still get the benefit of the "Hump" force-out payment.

The "Hump" Act itself provides that USCOA annuity plan elections can be revoked by officers prior to their retirement under the "Hump" act, and may be changed if the date of the change is at least five years prior to an officer's normal mandatory retirement date.

But, Comptroller General Joseph Campbell has told the Navy in Decision B-140593 that the right to change or revoke annuity plan elections does not apply to "Hump" officers who choose a retirement date earlier than that set in the "Hump" Act, or who are retired for disability.

All annuity plan changes authorized under the "Hump" legislation, Mr. Campbell emphasized, must be made prior to retirement.

In an earlier decision, (THE JOURNAL, 29 August) Mr. Campbell decreed that voluntarily retirements would not bar payment of "Hump" force-out benefits, provided that officers had been considered for non-continuation before that date their retirement applications had been approved. A disability retirement, he said, will bar the force-out pay.

Comptroller Ruling Affects Fleet Reserve

Tours of active duty for training after 9 April 1956 may now be counted for increased Navy and Marine Corps Fleet Reserve pay and for lump-sum "readjustment pay" in all services.

For the Navy and Marine Corps, Comptroller General decision B-139990, allows such active duty to be credited towards increased retired pay if it was performed after retirement or transfer to the Fleet Reserve.

Comptroller decision B-139855 allows all Reservists to count active duty for training after 9 April 1956 both for eligibility to receive "readjustment pay" and as a multiplier in computing the amount of pay.

Edwin Felch, project director in charge of developing the Titan guidance system, holds the "voice" of the ICBM.

VOICE OF A GUIDED MISSILE

This is a missile-borne transmitter. It is the "voice" of a missile in flight . . . part of a new radio-inertial guidance system developed by Bell Telephone Laboratories for the Ballistic Missile Division of the Air Force.

This versatile system helped deliver the nose cone of a Thor-Able test missile precisely to its South Atlantic target area—5000 miles from Cape Canaveral, Florida. So accurately was the nose cone placed that a waiting group of ships and planes retrieved it in a matter of hours. It was the first nose cone ever to be recovered after so long a flight.

The command guidance system which made such accuracy possible combines precision tracking radar with a special Remington Rand Univac computer. Fed a steady stream of signals from the missile-borne transmitter, the ground-based equipment compares the missile's flight path with the preselected path. Corrective steering orders are computed and transmitted automatically to the missile. The ground station monitors the progress of the flight continuously and obtains immediate evaluation of mission success. And since the principal control equipment is kept on the ground, expendable hardware in the missile itself is minimized.

This radio-inertial guidance system is a product of the Bell System's development-production team: Bell Laboratories and Western Electric. It is in production at Western Electric for the first operational squadrons of the Titan intercontinental ballistic missile.

Bell Labs scientists and engineers developed the world's most versatile telephone network and much of our nation's radar. They have constantly pioneered in missile systems. From their storehouse of knowledge and experience comes this new achievement in missile guidance.

Official Texts Concerning General LeMay's Reserves Forces Statement Released

FOLLOWING are the texts of statements made at the National Guard Association Conference in San Antonio concerning the remarks of General Curtis E. LeMay, Vice Chief of Staff of the Air Force, on his "one Reserve" concept.

Maj. Gen. Winston P. Wilson, Deputy Chief of the National Guard Bureau, presented a "summation" of General LeMay's remarks. This summation was given a semi-official stamp by the fact that it has been read and approved by General LeMay. It resulted from a transcript made at the AF Reserve Seminar by an official of the Air Division of the National Guard Bureau. This transcript was edited and shown to General LeMay, who read it and gave his approval.

More Than 1900 of SAC Will Get Top Stripes

A quota of 1,416 new senior and 554 new chief master sergeants will be filled by the SAC Central Selection Board which convenes 12 October at Offutt AFB, Neb.

In addition, nominations for an additional 15 senior and 22 chief master sergeants will be forwarded to USAF Headquarters.

SAC was given the authority to promote not more than 520 senior and 22 chief master sergeants in December. The remainder will add their stripes June 1960.

The board's president will be a colonel and the 15 members, lieutenant colonels.

Chaplain Foran At England

Chaplain (Maj.) Howard B. Foran has reported from Korea to become Staff Chaplain at England AFB, La.

With his wife, Clara, and four daughters, Debby, Beverly, Linda and Nan, he will reside in Alexandria, La.

This approved summation of General LeMay's remarks follows:

"The Air Force is faced with certain budgetary limitations which will require drastic and perhaps unpalatable decisions. These decisions must be made with one purpose in mind—to produce the greatest combat capability within the dollars and resources available. In this respect, we must take a real close look at every aspect of our program elements.

"One element of the overall Air Force program which we are looking at is the present and future roles of the Air Reserve Forces. As weapons complexities continue to increase, the possibility of their being maintained and operated with a high degree of efficiency by other than members of the active establishment will decrease. As we move into the future, I can see the tactical role for our Air Reserve Forces diminishing. Of necessity, we will have to use our forces in being to meet the enemy.

"In view of this, it is imperative that we determine new tasks for the Air Reserve Forces. Frankly, I have not been too happy with their programs.

"There are many vital and important roles in which their capabilities can be used. We must explore all of these.

Only One Component

"Looking ahead, I can see the need for only one Air Reserve Component. I personally do not believe we need both the Air National Guard and the Air Force Reserve. Having two components operating under two different systems is inefficient and costly.

"It is certain that the future will bring a variety of necessary missions for the Air Reserve Forces. We need every idea we can obtain. The determining of the future of our Reserve programs requires hard, clear thinking on the part of every one. This problem is now under study by the Air Staff and they will be helped by a Board of Officers working under the direction of the Assistant Chief of Staff for Reserve Forces. This board will have active duty, Air National Guard, and Air Force Reserve personnel assigned as working members."

Policy Not Changed

When asked "Does this change the policy as stated in the Chief of Staff's memorandum of the 21st of September, subject: Air Force Policy Regarding the Air Reserve Forces," General Wilson replied:

"I have since discussed with the Vice Chief of Staff his remarks to the Air Force Reserve Seminar.

"He stated that his remarks do not change the statement of policy of the Department of the Air Force, as enunciated by the Chief of Staff of the Air Force in his memorandum of the 21st of September. In accordance with this policy, Air Force planners are carrying out their projection for the next ten years. Present programs indicate that the structure of the Air Reserve Forces will continue very near the same level through 1970. He stated that this does not imply that there will not be changes. I am sure you realize that the vast revision of military hardware, methods, and techniques which have occurred in recent years, are only a preview of things to come. As in the past, where there is modernization in the Air Force, there will also be modernization in our Reserve Forces. He emphasized that he was projecting his thinking into the future when much of our weaponry will undergo great changes. He also emphasized that in the change from manned aircraft to missiles, many of the roles which are now done by manned aircraft, will be accomplished by un-manned missiles. This is the time era, he stated, that he referred to in his remarks before the Seminar.

"Effective Reserve"

"The question was then asked—Will there, in his opinion, be any need for Reserve Forces in that time period. His answer to this question was 'We are going to have a Reserve and an effective one.'

"He further stated that the first step in determining future roles is to convene a group of highly qualified officers to probe the entire problem of future utilization of the Air Reserve Forces and make necessary recommendations. He stated that he had great hopes that the results of this board will be effective and will align the Reserve Forces in proper mission.

"The Vice Chief of Staff in his remarks also stated that it was his personnel opinion that we require only one Reserve Component.

"Discussing this portion of his statement, he indicated that a single Reserve Force would be a most workable and efficient solution to the Reserve problem. He agreed that if there were changes in the present systems, they would have to be decided by the planners of our National policy and supported by the Congress."

There are 7,500 dots shown here. This is the number of engineers in the eight divisions of Martin. And 40 percent of these—the 3,000 dots in the circle—are electronics/electrical engineers.

It is this specialized capability that enables Martin to develop electronic systems which anticipate the exacting demands of the missile-space age.

Example: A Martin electronic system known as Master Operations Control (MOC) has been a vital factor in the exceptional performance of TITAN. By automatically checking the hundreds of systems necessary to successful flight, MOC has removed much of the human error from complicated countdown procedures.

Reserve Forces Problems Demand Action

Secretary of Defense McNamara, who wants to leave the Pentagon as soon as his services can be spared, may not desire at this late date, after avoiding the issue so long, to initiate a sweeping analysis of the strength and effectiveness, the progress and problems of the Nation's Reserve Forces, but surely that is what needs to be done.

As the situation now stands, the Services are confused, Congress is confused, and certainly individual members of the National Guard and Reserve are confused about the role of the Reserve Forces. Take, for example, the recent Air Force Reserve Forces Seminar at which some officials indicated that the Reserve Forces were never better, while no less an authority on combat readiness than General Curtis E. LeMay, Air Force Vice Chief of Staff, maintained that the weekend warriors are not meeting current requirements.

Or take the matter of manpower. The Administration proposes one strength for the National Guard and Reserve. Congress disagrees, provides additional funds, and fixes a minimum strength for the Guard. As far as can be ascertained, the Joint Chiefs of Staff have never made a comprehensive study of the total Reserve Forces which the Nation requires. Decisions must be made in the dark.

Because of the critical budget implications and their relationship to the Active Forces, but most importantly because of unprecedented readiness demands, the time is long since past when the Secretary of Defense should formulate a definitive policy on our Reserve Forces.

There is no question that the Reserve Forces structure represents one of the most complicated military—not to mention, political—problems that the Defense Department can tackle. But complexity of the task should not be allowed as an excuse for timidity.

If the Pentagon doesn't act, Congress should demand a comprehensive presentation by the Secretary of Defense, the Service Secretaries and the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Reserve Forces. Confusion must be replaced by confidence. Vital decisions must be made courageously in the presence of facts and not on the basis of preconceived budget formulations or political considerations.

Dynamic Leadership In Service R&D Programs

The reorganization of the Air Force's Air Research and Development Command is another important step being taken by the Services to vitalize R&D programs with the critical objective of compressing the time required between the concept of a new weapon and its delivery to our Fighting Forces. Lt. Gen. Bernard A. Schriever, USAF, says it may be possible, in some instances, to save as much as two years in the research, development, test, and engineering cycle.

What with the ARDC reorganization coming at a time when the Soviets were scoring a brilliant new mark in space, General Schriever's efforts are certain to win strong support at the Pentagon and on Capitol Hill.

The Army and Navy also are striving mightily to speed R&D efforts as much as possible, but all the Services are confronted with two problems over which they lack absolute control.

One is the obvious fact that R&D programs are dependent in large measure on the fiscal support that is asked by the Administration and provided by Congress. Today, we are paying the bitter price of misguided economies in the past, as the Soviets hurl payloads into space that probably will be beyond our capabilities for at least another year.

Aside from financial support, the military R&D program needs effective support, at the echelons above the individual Services. This was emphasized in the report of the Stever Board in June 1958, many of whose recommendations have formed the basis for the ARDC reorganization.

In addition to a strong appeal for action by the USAF "to put its own R&D activities in order," the Stever Board said that "second, the USAF must make clear to higher authorities the necessity for a reorientation of those activities of government above the Air Force that prevent it from doing the most effective job in R&D."

There is more than a little question that the creation of office of Director of Defense Research and Engineering on top of the Advanced Research Projects Agency has eliminated the delaying actions which prevent not only the Air Force, but all the Services, from attaining maximum results in minimum time in the R&D field.

This, we suggest, is a problem which the next session of Congress would do well to explore in full detail.

Comments On USCOA

I was quite interested in the article on the front page of the 19 September issue, regarding recommended revisions in the Contingency Option Act. I trust you are for them, and more.

I'd like to ask your strong editorial support for these proposed changes, and some others, I have supported you for some 20 years, and know the JOURNAL's influence on the Hill on Service legislation. I suggest your help for the following amendments:

A. That a retired officer, who did not wish to continue his participation in the program be allowed to cancel out AT ANY TIME. (The actuary could determine what part of his deposits, if any, he could be refunded) or

B. That the two year, change your mind provision (instead of five) be retroactive, where the individual had indicated his desire to revoke his option, at least two years prior to his retirement.

I subscribed to this act in late 1953. Options 1 and 4, in April 1954, after learning a little more about it, I changed my mind, decided I wanted no part of it, I submitted a revocation through channels (after my personnel officer told me I could) which was accepted by the Adjutant General, recorded, and acknowledged. I had to retire 31 December, 1958, four months before the end of the five year period. The Finance Center, quite legally, ruled my revocation was invalid, hence I have been paying $105 per month, since 1 January 1959, for something I do not want, and my wife, the beneficiary, does not want.

I believe, as a constitutional right, I should have the privilege of determining, where my money goes, and to whom. I earnestly request your support in these proposed amendments.

M/G Sory Smith Designated To Direct AF Reserve Forces Mission Study

The Air Force will convene a special group at the Pentagon 19 October to study long-range requirements and missions for its Air Reserve Forces to "best utilize their capabilities in support of the mission of the Air Force."

General Thomas D. White, Chief of Staff, named Maj. Gen. Sory Smith, Commander of Fourth Air Force (ConAC, as chairman) Other active Air Force members and the commands they represent are Maj. Gen. Lloyd P. Hopwood, Hq USAF, Maj. Gen. Daniel W. Jenkins, TAC, Maj. Gen. Romulus W. Puryear, ADC, Maj. Gen. William K. Martin, SAC, Maj. Gen. Al-

The group is expected to complete its study by 18 November.

In line with Air Force policy of making maximum use of its Reserve components, the 14 member Reserve Force Review Group "will consider possible roles for the Reserve Forces in the light of revisions in military equipment, methods, and techniques and the organizational patterns, force structure, and readiness capability which will be needed for effective utilization," a Pentagon announcement said.

The Air Force Reserve is represented by Brig. Gen. John O. Bradshaw of West Lafayette, Ind., and Brig. Gen. Kenneth Stiles of Falls Church, Va. Air National Guard members of the Review Group are Brig. Gen. Donald J. Strait of Newark, N. J., and Col. James M. Trail of Boise, Idaho.

Capt. Barr Of Navy Gets Industry Space Post

CAPT. Norman Lee Barr, Director of Aviation and Space Medicine Research for the Navy, has retired to join Republic Aviation Corporation as Chief of Space Environment and Life Sciences research.

Dr. Barr, widely recognized as an authority on human responses to high-altitude flight, will be responsible primarily for activities in Republic's new Space Environment and Life Sciences Laboratory, one of seven being built into the company's new $14-million Applied Research and Development Center at Farmingdale, Long Island, N. Y.

Dr. Barr, formerly Navy Deputy Director for Medical Research and Project Director for RAM (Research, Astronautical Medicine), last summer directed the Navy project which launched the monkeys Able and Baker, from Cape Canaveral, Fla. 1500 miles through space at an altitude of 300 miles.

He has compiled more than 12,000 hours in the air, first receiving his wings from the Army Air Corps, later resigning to fly as a commercial pilot in Central and South America, and then re-entering the service, this time receiving his wings as a Navy aviator. He is said to be the only military officer entitled to wear separate military aviation wings.

Army Sec'y "Categorically Rejects" Idea National Guard Importance Has Lessened

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

"I categorically reject the frequently expressed idea that the importance of the National Guard had diminished because of the tremendous potential of strategic nuclear weapons."

Thus Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker gave reassurance to the National Guard Association conference here October that his Department still depends heavily upon them as a major component of the National Defense.

"The active Army," Mr. Brucker declared, "counts upon the immediate availability of National Guard units for the prompt expansion of its combat forces in any emergency."

"Under limited war conditions, those divisions already designated as part of the Ready Reserve Strategic Army Forces would be mobilized at once to recreate strategic reserve in the Continental United States, replacing Strategic Army Corps units initially committed to the scene of conflict."

"Under conditions of general war, every Army National Guard unit would, of course, be available for the prompt expansion of the Active Army."

Secretary Brucker told the conference that National Guard equipment levels and training status are far above those existing prior to WWII and Korea.

He added, however, that obsolescence of many of its weapons and a great deal of its equipment is one of the main obstacles to complete readiness of the Army National Guard. He characterized this situation as one of the "unpleasant facts of life" with which the Service must learn to live until these items become more generally available.

But the Secretary assured the National Guard leaders that "no effort will be spared to produce them" and that new weapons and equipment "will be issued to all components when available according to the most sensible system of priority which we can devise."

"High on the priority list to receive new equipment when it comes off the assembly line," he pledged, "will be those National Guard divisions and other early ready units which have been selected to meet the Ready Reserve STRAF requirements."

Will Emphasize Small Units, Tactics; Seek Young Leaders, L/G Powell Asks

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

TRAINING emphasis for the Army National Guard in 1960 will be placed in three areas:

- 1) Small unit training and tests,
- 2) More time in tactical training, and
- 3) Qualification of personnel in the pentomic concept.

This preview of next year's program was given 6 October to the 81st General Conference of the National Guard Association meeting here by Lt. Gen. Herbert B. Powell, Deputy Commanding General for Reserve Forces, U. S. Army Continental Army Command, CONARC as the responsibility for formulating the training program for the National Guard as well as all components of the U. S. Army.

"Army Guard training must be planned to insure that lower elements of units are satisfactorily trained before the next level of training is undertaken," General Powell said.

To do this," he continued, "General a job for both the Active Army and the Army National Guard. The important thing is we cannot cross that bridge when we come to it. We must act NOW—TOGETHER."

"Barring the catastrophe of another war," General Powell said, "are we developing the leadership required ten years from now? Will we produce the inspired combat leadership of Lt. Gen. Ray McClain, Maj. Gen. Robert Biekler, and Major Generals Winston Wilson, Ray Hugg, and Joe Foss? Will the ability and statesmanship of Ellard Walsh and Milton Reckord be developed in the years ahead?"

"I urge you to look into your own personnel situation with an objective eye."

Board Will Study USAFR Lt. Records

Brig. Gen. W. C. Morse, Air Reserve Records Center Commander, Denver, reports that a board will convene 9 and 10 November to consider approximately 1000 eligible Reserve officers, not on extended active duty, for promotion to 1st Lt.

Eligible officers must hold a promotion service date on or before 30 September 1957. Those selected for promotion will be promoted on the date they complete three years service.

The Selection Board will also consider about 125 1st Lts. for unit vacancy promotions to Captain. To be considered, each officer must have completed two years Promotion List Service and be recommended by his commander.

Guard President Queries AF Sec'y And Gets Quick Reply

The following telegram was sent Monday afternoon, 5 October, by the National Guard Association president to Secretary of the Air Force James H. Douglas:

"The National Guard Association of the United States, presently convened in the 81st General Conference at San Antonio, Tex., has taken official note of remarks attributed in the press to General Curtis LeMay, Vice Chief of Staff of the U. S. Air Force, in which he downgraded the Air National Guard as an element of national defense."

"In view of a recently published restatement of Department of Air Force policy on Air Reserve forces by the office of the Chief of Staff, the officers of this Association and the delegates to the 81st General Conference view with concern the personal remarks by the second highest ranking officer of the U. S. Air Force, who is charged with the responsibility of implementing the policies of the Air Force, which contradict the announced official policies of the Department of the Air Force."

"The record will show that the personal observations of General LeMay are not in accord nor based on the findings of Air Force commanders who are charged with the responsibility for supervision of Air National Guard units to assure that they meet standards set by the Air Force."

"Request from you clarification of the differences existing in the reported remarks of the Vice Chief of Staff and the official policy of the Department of the Air Force. It would be appreciated if we could hear from you in this important matter prior to adjournment of the 81st General Conference Thursday noon, October 8, in order that your remarks may be transmitted to the assembled delegates."

Secretary's Answer

Secretary Douglas on 6 October sent the following reply to "Mr." William H. Harrison, Jr.:

"I deeply appreciate the opportunity you have extended me to clarify the policy of the United States Air Force concerning the future of our Reserve Forces."

"General LeMay, the Vice Chief of Staff, informs me that his recent remarks concerning the Air Force Reserve and the Air National Guard were intended only to stimulate dynamic thinking, which would insure vital and essential roles for their members in the era of growing reliance upon increasingly complex and unmanned systems."

"Toward this end, he recently approved the appointment of 14 highly qualified officers to conduct a study of long-range requirements and missions for the Reserve Forces. This group will convene in Washington on October 19th and should complete its study by November 18th. Its members will consider future roles for the Air Force Reserve and the Air National Guard in the light of revisions in military equipment, methods and techniques. Members of this group were selected on the basis of experience in the Active Establishment and the Reserve Forces and because of their familiarity with Reserve capabilities and problems. They include representatives of the Air Force Reserve and the Air National Guard."

"Their study should result in strengthening the contribution of the Reserve Forces to our National Defense."

"In his remarks to the Reserve Forces Seminar in Washington on September 25, 1959, General LeMay expressed the personal opinion that the Air National Guard and Air Force Reserve should be combined into one Reserve component. Although personally convinced that a single Reserve Force would be most effective, he recognizes that any changes in the present system would have to be decided by the planners of our national policy and supported by the Congress."

"Prior to my receipt of your request for clarification of Air Force policy, General LeMay had authorized General Wilson to inform your Association that the official policy of the Air Force concerning the Reserve Forces remains as stated by General Thomas D. White, Chief of Staff, on September 21, 1959. That policy is as follows:

"The Air Force considers the Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard as useful and valuable parts of our over-all aerospace power and will continue to take advantage of their inherent potential. The Air Force not only intends to continue to support these components but also hopes to find new methods and new missions to make them even more useful."

"I also support the view that we must all give our best thoughts to problems arising from rapid technological changes if we are to make sure that Reserve Forces will continue to play vital roles in defense of our country."

FOUR STALWARTS—

FT. SAM HOUSTON, TEX.

SECRETARY of the Army Wilber M. Brucker was host at a luncheon here 5 October for visiting officers of the National Guard. He took particular delight in introducing four four-star officers, residents of San Antonio, who sat at the head table.

They were: General Walter Krueger, General William H. Simpson, General Courtney Hodges, and General Henry I. Hodes.

Secretary Brucker said: "These are four stalwarts of the Army. We are proud of them as we are proud of all retired officers who have served their Nation so well."

A JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

General (Commanding General of CONARC) has prescribed the satisfactory completion of Army Training Tests as prerequisite to advancement to higher positions.

"We fully realized that to carry out current Army Training Tests in the time available to the National Guard require some degree of modification. The CONARC and ZI Army staffs are ready to assist you in this respect."

General Powell also forecast that more emphasis will be placed, next Summer, on tactical bivouacs.

"Over the years," he said, "we have found that most men like to live in the field. Much more integrated training can be accomplished there. It also increases the hours spent in tactical training and decreases the time wasted commuting from garrison areas."

General Powell impressed upon the Guard leaders the importance of seeking and encouraging the "many fine and hard-working young leaders in the Guard."

"These are your future replacement," declared. "They should be carefully trained and motivated so that we do not lose leaders to carry the Guard on in peace and tradition."

In a few short years we will lose our officers and men with leadership experience developed over the years in peace and war. How to replace them is

GENERAL LeMAY HAS DEMONSTRATED characteristic courage and concern for national security in holding steadfastly to the highly controversial personal judgment that the Air Force should have a single Reserve Force. Many other military leaders who have held similar views—in the Army, as well as the Air Force—have kept their silence on this issue for “political” considerations.

WHATEVER THE WRANGLE which his remarks to the Reserve Forces Seminar have provoked, there is no question that General LeMay’s statements and the reactions to them will force the Defense Department to take a new look at the Reserve Forces. For years, the facile tendency has been to push National Guard and Reserve problems under the rug.

BECAUSE THERE WAS NO TRANSCRIPT of General LeMay’s comments to the Reserve Forces Seminar, he was in a position, had he desired, to take the edge off some of his remarks in a “clarifying” statement, particularly those relating to the need for a single Reserve. Instead, because he is a military man without fear when it comes to asserting defense needs—whether as a combat commander in charge of SAC or as a key staff officer at the Pentagon—General LeMay has reaffirmed his conviction that the structure of the Reserve Forces is not sound.

THE HARD-HITTING CRITICISM from the politically powerful National Guard Association, notably the resolution calling for a reevaluation of his status as Vice CofS, certainly would carry a major impact on Capitol Hill should General LeMay be nominated at a later date, as has been most reasonable to expect, for higher office. He knew this, of course, when he said his piece.

THE ARMY’S INFORMATION CHIEF has told the National Guard Association that the Army intends to “go for broke” in the drive to create a “One Army” concept. Maj. Gen. William Quinn flew to San Antonio to tell General Conference participants and newsmen covering the sessions that the Army was going to go all-out to strengthen unity of the Active Army, National Guard, and Reserve. One of the most dynamic Army Information Chiefs in recent years, General Quinn has ordered his staff to give a top priority to the “One Army” drive.

THE ARMY LANGUAGE SCHOOL at the Presidio of Monterey is certain to become heavily involved in Appropriations hearings next year. The Air Force has pulled out of the school, effective 1 July, and California legislators are protesting the action. Another who has questioned the reduction at the school is Senator Humphrey (D-Minn.). Many on Capitol Hill contend that the Monterey facility should be converted to an Armed Forces Language School.

THE NUCLEAR-POWERED MISSILE CRUISER Long Beach, being constructed by the Bethlehem Steel Company at Quincy, Mass., is being fitted with ballistic missile installations, according to the official “Bureau of Ships Journal.” Naval missile experts have said that it would be possible to scale the Polaris IRBM for use aboard cruisers. In addition to the missile cruisers Boston and Canberra, pioneer vessels of their class, and the Galveston, which is now undergoing trials and evaluation, the Navy plans to complete conversion of five other cruisers as missile ships by about next May. They are Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Providence, Springfield, and Topeka, with three more conversions scheduled—Albany, Chicago and Columbus. The BuShips Journal says that the last three ships will have twin Talos installations fore and aft, Tartar, and Asroc, and will carry, as offensive armament, ballistic missiles.

LAST WEEK’S ISSUE of The Journal recounted the story of how the Office of the Assistant CNO (Air) has a “Director of Astronautics,” although the Air Force has been barred from use of the word “Astronautics.” Instead, the Air Force calls Brig. Gen. Homer A. Boushay the “Director of Advanced Technology.” Now comes word (see page 2) of the activation of a new division in the Office of Deputy CNO for Development, VAdm. John T. Hayward. Its designation: “Astronautics Development and Advanced Technology Division,” under Capt. F. H. Marshall. The new Bureau of Naval Weapons (see page 1) will have an “Astronautics Director.”

THE FIRST GERMAN STUDENTS to complete training in nuclear weapons at the Army Ordnance Corps Guided Missile School, Huntsville, Ala., have been graduated. A major and two captains of the Luftwaffe have finished an 18-week course that trained them to serve as ordnance staff officers for guided missile and nuclear weapons.

THE LOBBER MISSILE, being developed by Convair for use as an Army logistical delivery system, is being studied for Navy ASW application. It would be used as a depth charge, possibly armed with a nuclear warhead.

A BEHEMOTH SHIP 1559 miles long, with 212-mile beam would be required to carry all the cargo and passengers transported by all Military Sea Transportation Service ships during the past decade. In its 10-year life MSTs hauled nearly 14 million passengers and more than a billion barrels of petroleum and about 178 million tons of military cargo. Had one giant ship performed these functions it would reach from New York to Miami.

ARMY PARTISANS ARE CERTAIN to make a point that the new reorganization of the Air Force’s ARDC (see Page 1) confirms the Army’s contention that its so-called “arsenal concept” provides the strong “in-house” supervision and control of R&D projects which envisaged as one result of the revised ARDC structure. However, ARDC officials emphasize that the new plan will not diminish the Air Force’s reliance on industry for weapons development.

THERE WAS AN ACCENT ON “RELIABILITY” at the Pentagon news conference 6 October at which Lt. Gen. Bernard A. Schriever, head of ARDC, told newsmen details of the new plan. His remarks were recorded on tape, taken down on a Stenotype machine, and transcribed on an Audiograph.

THRIFTY PHYSICIANS SHOULD TAKE NOTICE of the Navy’s latest pitch to recruit medical officers for South Pole duty. In a campaign to obtain volunteers, the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery tells its medical officers: “Here is an opportunity to round out your medical training; to save money; to participate in an interesting research program, biological, medical and geophysical; and to become acquainted with the world’s last frontier.”

ARMED FORCES STRENGTH is due for a further fall. With the approach of the holiday season, the Services are announcing “early release” programs. It is estimated that about 8500 military personnel whose normal expiration of obligated service or enlistment would occur between 18 December 1959 and 4 January 1960, will be released between 10-18 December. Enlistments fall in advance of the Thanksgiving-Christmas-New Year’s season.

ARMY SECRETARY BRUCKER made political hay out of his visit to the National Guard Association Conference in San Antonio. He gave a luncheon for the visiting National Guardsmen and then met with Bexar County Republican leaders led by Joe Sheldon, State Committee man. Former Michigan governor Brucker told the Republicans: “I’m glad you’re keeping the vigil down here. This is what the party needs.”

LT. GEN. “IRON MIKE” O’DANIEL, Army hero of WWII and Korea happened to be visiting San Antonio during the Guard Convention. Secretary Brucker spotted him in the crowd and pulled him out for pictures and introductions. Another important observer at the Guard sessions was Brig. Gen. N. Dwight Allison, USA-Ret. He is Managing Editor of the San Antonio Light and a staunch supporter of the Armed Forces. General Allison served in the European theater during WWII.

ONLY 28 OUT OF 154 NAVY commanders in the Civil Engineer, Chaplain and Supply Corps who were considered for retention by the selection board (see P. 8) which chose new Staff Corps captains will be continued on active duty. Under the “Hump” law, the 126 not selected for retention will be retired during this fiscal year. The 154 officers considered have been passed over for promotion at least two times.

THE THREE “COMBAT READY” divisions of the Strategic Army Corps—there were four in fiscal ’59—have not been manned at full strength. A report from Ft. Lewis, Wash., home of the 4th Infantry Division discloses that this STRAC unit “has usually been between 5-10% below its proposed 13,748 strength,” but hopes soon to be at full strength for the first time since its April 1957 reorganization as a Pentomic unit.

THE UNUSUAL SITUATION of a senior flag officer reporting to a junior admiral may result when the Navy names its Director of the Pacific Missile Range and Astronautic Programs in the new BuWeps structure (see Page 1) RAdm. Jack P. Monroe is Commander of the Pt. Mugu, Calif., Pacific Missile Range. He holds a date of rank as admiral from 1 July 1956. If the Navy names a junior admiral or a flag-selectee to the BuWeps post, Admiral Monroe will report to the Assistant Chief of Program Management through a junior officer. Since the five other BuWeps Directors are to be captains, it seems likely that the Astronautics post will go to a junior flag officer.

“COST EFFECTIVENESS” is a term you will be hearing more and more as budget restrictions force revisions in weapons programs. It’s certain to be used frequently in speeches and in presentations on Capitol Hill.

ANOTHER FISCAL REFERENCE which will get increasing action in public statements of military leaders concerns the relationship of military funds to the Gross National Product. Maj. Gen. R. J. Friedman, USAF Budget Director talked about this in his report to the Reserve Forces Seminar (The Journal 3 October). Speaking last weekend in Philadelphia, Lt. Gen. Arthur G. Trudeau, Army R&D Chief noted that at the end of WWII, defense needs consumed about 30% of the GNP; it’s about 10% today.

THE MAJOR HOPE of military chiefs for an increase in budget funds hinges on acceptance of an approach which would link defense spending to GNP. This would mean an increase of about $1.5 billion per year, on the basis of the present ratio.

THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION will renew its efforts in the next session of Congress to gain extra pay for Service lawyers, similar to that provided for physicians and dentists. The Pentagon will oppose the move.

Gens. Harrison, Shoop Report On National Guard Relations

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

THIS is the text of the statement by Maj. Gen. William H. Harrison, jr., President, National Guard Association of the United States, to the 81st General Conference here concerning the status and role of the Air National Guard:

"Comments downgrading the importance of the Air National Guard as a combat ready reserve of the United States Air Force, which have been attributed in the press to General LeMay, put him at odds in this important matter with the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, General Thomas D. White.

"Less than two weeks ago, General White's office restated the policy of the Air Force on Air Reserve Forces. A Memorandum published by his office stated:

"The Air Force considers the Air Force Reserve and the Air National Guard as useful and valuable parts of our overall aerospace power and will continue to take advantage of their inherent potential. The Air Force not only intends to continue to support these components, but also hopes to find new methods and new missions to make them ever more useful."

"If General LeMay has been correctly quoted, it appears he is flying off course.

"Furthermore, what General LeMay is reported to have said does not jibe with the readiness reports on Air National Guard squadrons which have been compiled by regular Air Force inspectors.

"Nor do his comments jibe with the fact that it was a Florida Air National Guard squadron that captured first place a year ago in the worldwide Air Force gunnery meet, outshooting all Regular Air Force teams. The team fired the only perfect score ever achieved in that contest.

"General LeMay may recall that close to 80 per cent of the Air National Guard was rapidly mobilized for the Korean War, and hundreds of Air National Guard pilots were flying combat missions over Korea in a matter of days."

The text of the statement by Maj. Gen. Clarence A. Shoop, Chief of Staff, California Air National Guard, Chairman of the Air Affairs Committee, National Guard Association of the United States, and Chairman of the Air Force Committee of the Reserve Forces Policy Board follows:

"Records compiled by the Air Force show the Air National Guard to be at a high level of combat readiness.

"The Air National Guard is ready to transition to the most advanced type jet aircraft and is capable of adapting itself not only to the most advanced equipment, but to new roles and missions that may be required as the result of changing concepts of warfare.

"Reports coming to me not only from Air Force inspectors but from field engineers working for major aircraft and weapons systems manufacturers show the Air National Guard squadrons have no difficulty transmitting to the most sophisticated combat aircraft and weapons systems."

Carriers Randolph, Hornet Win Prizes

The Chief of Naval Operations has awarded the Marjorie Sterrett Award to the support aircraft carriers Randolph (CVS 15) and Hornet (CVS 12).

Admiral Arleigh Burke, USN, has requested the Chase Manhattan Bank, trustee of the fund, to send checks for $500 to the recreation fund of each of the ships, to be used for the benefit of enlisted personnel.

The Marjorie Sterrett Award is made annually to two ships—one in the Atlantic Fleet and one in the Pacific—scoring highest in battle efficiency competition. In the interest of fairness among different types of ships, the award is rotated to ships administratively assigned to the air type commands. This year's competition was restricted to ships administratively assigned to the air type commands. In 1958 the award went to two amphibious ships.

The type for next year's competition has not been selected.

The Marjorie Sterrett Award was established shortly after World War I. It was named for a child who sent a dime to the New York Herald Tribune during the war "to help build a battleship for Uncle Sam." The Herald Tribune and other newspapers, aided by public subscription, built the fund to a little over $22,000. Original charter called for the funds to go to battleships and submarines, however, in 1948 this system was modified to include all types of ships. It has been used since that time, except for the years of WWII and the Korean War, to give battle efficiency prizes to ships of the fleet.

Army Revises Rules For July '60 ROPA Changes

of the maximum service attritive provisions of the Act. In effecting such releases, the Army insured that Reserve component officers who were retained on active duty could with some exceptions qualify for retirement prior to reaching the maximum age or completing the maximum service prescribed.

The maximum service provisions of ROPA will become effective 2 July 1960. These provisions will require release from active status in the Reserve based on "total years of service."

For colonels and brigadier generals the maximum is 30 years service (or five years in grade, whichever occurs later), for lieutenant colonels and below 28 years service and for WAC majors 25 years of service.

"Total years of service" is defined as the greater of satisfactory service or constructive service, the latter being the number of years by which an individual exceeds 25 years of age.

The practical effect of this constructive service standard is to set the maximum ages for active status at 55 years for colonels (25 years age plus 30 years service—55), 53 for lieutenant colonels and below (25 years of age plus 28 years of service—53), and 50 years for WAC majors (25 years of age plus 25 years of service—50).

ROPA contains discretionary authority for general exceptions to the maximum age release requirements effective until 2 July 1960.

Under this authority, approximately 100 Chaplains, and 500 officers of the Army Medical Services (not including Medical Service Corps) will continue on active duty until age 60 if by that time they can qualify for active duty retirement.

Selection of these corps for implementation of the discretionary authority was based on the problems of the professional corps officers whose extended periods of training to acquire professional recognition results in their entrance on active duty at an older age such that they may not be able to attain eligibility for active duty retirement prior to mandatory release from an active status in the Reserve.

Additionally, under this same retention authority, as a one time action in order to meet the needs of the service, approximately 100 WAC officers are being retained. The majority of these will qualify for active duty retirement by age 55. The records of the remainder of this group will be reviewed on an individual basis when each reaches 55 years of age to determine if further retention on active duty is justified.

An Army announcement continued: "Although ROPA in itself does not contain authority for exceptions to the maximum service provisions, other provisions of law (10 USC 672(d)) provide necessary discretionary authority for retaining certain personnel on active duty, in time of peace, with the consent of the individual. This authority is being used for a limited number only to meet certain requirements. It is intended under this authority to continue to retain professional corps officers mentioned above (Chaplains and officers of the Army Medical Service) after 1 July 1960 until age 60 if by that time they can qualify for active duty retirement.

"In addition to the above, there are two other groups of officers (totaling approximately 300) who are being retained on active duty.

"The first of these groups are officers who were given indefinite categories for special purposes even though they could not qualify for retirement prior to the date when release is required by ROPA. Their retention for 20 years of active Federal service has been programmed.

"These officers will continue on active duty with their consent until they are retirement qualified. The second group is composed of officers, all of whom have special skills, who were voluntarily retained for a limited period even though they could not qualify for active duty retirement. These officers were aware, and their category statements so indicated, that they would be released when they reached maximum age or completed the maximum service specified under ROPA. The records of the officers of this group will be reviewed when the established release time approaches to determine if their continued retention is required."

The Army added:

"As in the case of all other categories of officers, retention on active duty of those officers who are exceptions to the maximum service provisions is dependent upon their maintaining established standards for military service. The details of active duty terms and release from active duty are contained in AR 135-173 and AR 135-215 with Change 2 and Change 8, respectively, just released. Officers to be retained or released have been or are being informed individually by The Adjutant General."

Modern Aircraft For Air Guard Depends On Savings, M/G Wilson Tells Association

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Association here 6 October.

THE Convair F-102 is expected to be added to the Air National Guard program and also additional North American F-100s and Northrop F-89Js, but acceptance of these advanced aircraft will depend upon what savings the Air Guard can make to offset the increased costs, Maj. Gen. Winston P. Wilson, Deputy Chief of the National Guard Bureau, told the National Guard

Maj. Gen. Wilson

"These conversions," General Wilson said, "will require additional funding. Whether we will be able to accept all the aircraft made available depends, of course, on where we can make savings to take care of the increased cost of flying hours, which includes maintenance, operation, and petroleum, oil, and lubricants."

"As soon as the new program for the active establishment is stabilized, we will know how we stand. You can rest assured that we will make every effort to modernize as fast as aircraft and funds are made available."

General Wilson, top Air officer in the National Guard Bureau, told the Association that Air Guard operational readiness has increased 500%.

"Combat readiness of aircraft," he marks (Page 8); an editorial (Page 10) and Memo comments (Page 12)—all related to the controversy that has been touched off by his remarks related to the Air National Guard.

Maj. Gen. Winston P. Wilson, Deputy Chief of the National Guard Bureau, told the Conference that General LeMay has "great hopes" that a forthcoming Reserve Forces study (see Page 10) "will be effective and will align the Reserve Forces in proper missions."

At the opening of the conference, General Harrison and Maj. Gen. Clarence A. Shoop, Chief of Staff of the California Air National Guard and Chairman of the Air Affairs Committee of the Association, released to the press comments made by General LeMay at the Reserve Forces Seminar, as reported in last week's issue of THE JOURNAL.

At the National Guard Bureau's panel presentation, General Harrison asked General Wilson, top Air Guard officer in the Bureau, to present the essence of General LeMay's remarks and to state if this changes the position of the Chief of Staff's memorandum on Reserve policy issued 21 September.

General Wilson replied by reading an edited and approved version of General LeMay's remarks (see page 8).

In reply to the second part of the question, General Wilson reported that he had discussed it with General LeMay and the Vice Chief of Staff had told him that his remarks do not change the official memorandum of policy.

General LeMay was reported as saying that his remarks apply to the time era when many of the roles of manned aircraft will be performed by missiles.

The Vice Chief of Staff, General Wilson said, reiterated his personal opinion that "we require only one reserve component," but also said General LeMay emphasized that "we are going to have a Reserve and an effective one."

WHAT DID GEN. LEMAY MEAN?

Maj. Gen. William H. Harrison, jr., departed from the formal text of his report to the National Guard Association Conference in San Antonio, to recognize the challenged posed by the statement

"Command" Gets Stress In ARDC Reorganization

tional title of "ARDC Deputy Commander."

The four divisions will be: Ballistic Missile Division, under Maj. Gen. Osmond J. Ritland; Wright Air Development Division, Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, under Maj. Gen. Stanley T. Wray; Research Division, Washington, D. C., under Brig. Gen. Benjamin G. Holzman, who has been head of the Air Force Office of Scientific Research; and the Command and Control Development Division, to be located in the Boston area, with its commander yet to be designated.

General Schriever told a Pentagon news conference this week that the Reorganization follows the study of a special task force he organized in May, one month after taking command of ARDC.

He said centralized operational management of the vast ARDC effort will provide "maximum capability for compressing time."

Stressing that the Air Force would continue to rely heavily on industry for fulfillment of R&D requirements, General Schriever said the new plan will strengthen the Air Force's "in house" control and supervision of the program.

He explained that the new plan is tied to the "concept of concurrency," in which every effort will be made to slash the time factor in the R.D.T.&E. cycle.

The Command and Control Division will be the last of the four commands to be activated, probably requiring at least six months to become operational.

General Schriever says that when the new plan is fully implemented, the division commanders will have direct control of the various ARDC centers which are conducting work on their behalf. This means that they will have full command responsibility.

The division commanders will be responsible from the outset for the projects being conducted at ARDC facilities, and then ultimately will be responsible for operations of the facilities themselves.

At ARDC Headquarters, a Deputy Chief of Staff organization will be created, with six principal activities: Plans, Research and Engineering, Intelligence, Materiel, Personnel, and Comptroller.

General Schriever said that the Reorganization will permit great emphasis on long-range planning and broad program direction from ARDC Headquarters, rather than detailed project supervision. That will be the task of the division commanders.

Here is how the Pentagon explained the functions of the new divisions:

"The Air Force Ballistic Missile Division will continue in its area of ballistic missile and space program direction."

"The Directorate of Systems Management and major elements of the Wright Air Development Center will be combined to form a Wright Air Development Division. This Division will be responsible for program direction of all aeronautical and related systems."

"Elements of the present Air Force Cambridge Research Center will serve as the nucleus for an Air Force Command and control Development Division at Hanscom Field, Bedford, Mass. This Division will assume program direction of all Air Force communications and electronic control systems. These complex systems are of increasing importance in the command and control of Air Force weapons in the ballistic missile and space age."

"An Air Force Research Division will be established in the Washington area for the management of the Research Program. The Air Force Office of Scientific Research, European Office, ARDC, and other elements of the Command engaged in basic research will be controlled by this Division."

Former USAF A Professor Will Direct Engineering Division For AC Spark Plug

Col. Benjamin P. Blasingame, former Head of the Astronautics Department at the U. S. Air Force Academy has been named to Director of Engineering for the AC Spark Plug Division of General Motors operation in Milwaukee. Holder of a doctorate in science and instrumentation from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Colonel Blasingame was among the original group selected to establish the Air Force Ballistic Missile Division at Inglewood, Calif., in 1954 under the command of then Maj. Gen. (now Lt. Gen.) Bernard Schriever.

General Schriever named Colonel Blasingame the first Chief of Guidance and Control at BMD where he was responsible for setting up development programs for the guidance systems of Air Force ballistic missiles.

In 1956, Colonel Blasingame became Director of the TITAN ICBM program.

Inertial guidance systems for its Thor IRBM and MACE, an air breathing missile, are manufactured at the Milwaukee plants. AC is also developing an inertial guidance system for the Titan.

Flying Soldier

AEROJET-General Corporation is designing a free-flight AeroPAK model similar to the mockup displayed by this Aerojet engineer. Tests will be conducted with this device to study flight characteristics of a free-flight vehicle.

The AeroPAK is designed to power special combat troops and to assist them in overcoming terrain obstacles.

The manual controls permit the operator to travel up, down, forward, backward and turn around at varying speeds.

The device basically consists of a U-shaped fuel tank, pressurized air tank and two thrust chambers. The hydrogen peroxide fuel passes through a silver catalyst breaking down into superheated steam and oxygen, and gives each exhaust nozzle a variable thrust up to 150 pounds.

VOUGHT CRUSADERS JOIN THE CORPS

High above Marine Corps bases around the world, Leatherneck pilots are letting out the reins on their new Chance Vought Crusader fighters.

It's a 1,000-plus-mph experience for the pilots. But, ultimately, it's the Marine rifleman who stands to gain.

This carrier fighter's striking speed and endurance mean air superiority over beachheads and airheads — wherever the rifleman needs it most. And, with its short-field capability, the Crusader can move into newly secured areas to operate alongside the units it supports.

This is the fighter that introduced 1,000-mph speed to carrier decks. More than 500 Crusader fighters and photoplanes have become operational with the Fleet.

The Crusader is joining Marine Air Groups the same way. Its smooth responses provide Marine pilots a safe step upward in performance... plenty of performance to guarantee the rifleman a friendly sky!

In addition to piloted aircraft, Chance Vought's Aeronautics Division specializes in atmospheric missiles and anti-submarine apparatus. Other major interests are being aggressively advanced in the company's Astronautics, Electronics, Research, and Range Systems Divisions.

Pentagon Set To Announce Structure Of New Bureau Of Naval Weapons

From first page—

Programs. The six Program Directors will be responsible to an Assistant Chief for Program Management, who will be a rear admiral.

As part of the Program Management structure, there will also be an Assistant Chief for Planning and Review. He will be a rear admiral.

As initially planned, there were to be four Assistant Chiefs in the operating area—Assistant BuWeps Chief to head Operating Offices—Assistant Chief for Research, Development, Test and Evaluation; Assistant Chief for Fleet Readiness; Assistant Chief for Field Support; and, Assistant Chief for Procurement and Production.

Admiral Stroop told THE JOURNAL that a decision has been reached to split the latter office into two parts. This will divorce the production and procurement functions.

A fifth operating office will be activated to handle contract matters.

Admiral Stroop said that a name has not yet been chosen for the new business contracting organization, but that it probably will be known as the Office of the Assistant Chief for Contracts.

At the same time, Admiral Stroop said, the previously planned Office of Assistant Chief for Procurement and Production would most likely take a name similar to Assistant Chief for Production and Quality Control.

The quality control function originally was planned as a Staff component under cognizance of the Assistant Chief for Program Management. This unit, which was to have been called Director of Reliability and Quality Control, will be eliminated from the revised BuWeps structure.

Admiral Stroop said the decision to divide the procurement and production functions was made in light of the fact that Armed Services Procurement Regulations have become so complicated that contract specialists are needed to procure the most advantageous contracts for the Navy.

In the past, scientific and technical specialists working on a particular program were also the contracting agents.

Under the new plan, there will be a complete separation of scientific and technical people from the contract awards function.

Also to be named in the BuWeps organization will be an Inspector General and Assistant Chief for Administration, a Comptroller, Directors of Safety, Directors for Ships Characteristics, Executive Assistants and Special Assistants.

All Assistant Chiefs and the IG will be rear admirals.

Admiral Stroop's Bureau encompasses about 350 field stations and establishments. BuWeps will employ more than 4400 military and civilian personnel at the Department level.

A total of about 210,000 personnel in world-wide field establishments will be employed by BuWeps, most of them civilian industrial employees.

Deputy Chief of the Bureau is RAdm. William A. Schoech.

The Bureau was established 1 September after Congress and the President approved a recommendation by a Navy Board that the Bureaus of Ordnance and Aeronautics be consolidated. Both Bureaus will continue their normal functions until completion of the merger about 1 January.

At that time Admiral Stroop will assume the responsibilities of both the older bureaus and they will be disestablished.

Present Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics is RAdm. R. E. Dixon. RAdm. Miles H. Hubbard, who has been Deputy and Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance under Admiral Stroop, is now Acting Chief of that Bureau. Both Admiral Dixon and Admiral Hubbard will receive new assignments.

Secretary of the Navy William B. Franke has said that the merger of the two bureaus is several months ahead of original schedules set up to effect the change. Target date for getting the new Bureau into operation originally was fixed at 1 July 1960.

Organizational structure for BuWeps was evolved by a Planning Group headed by VAdm. E. W. Clepton, Chief of Naval Material, with RAdm. C. B. Martell acting as his Deputy.

Air Guard Must Look To Future

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

THE Air National Guard must look five to ten years ahead to adjust its thinking to the role of the future, Maj. Gen. Clarence A. Shoop, California ANG, Chairman of the Committee on Air Affairs, reported to the National Guard Association conference meeting here.

"I do not envision," General Shoop said, "the elimination of the Air National Guard from our defense, but the emphasis being placed upon the development of new weapons and means for their delivery is bound to have considerable effect upon our program."

General Shoop asked all guardsmen to submit their ideas as to the future of their organization.

He said: "We must look beyond the immediate horizons and adjust our thinking to the future—five or ten years or more."

"We must continually re-evaluate the Air Guard current contribution to the military posture of our country and seek to develop plans and programs within our present and future capabilities which will permit us to advance the active force in the changing patterns of warfare."

"We must take advantage of every possible mission," he said, "both intermediate and long range, to the end that the Air National Guard will remain the nation's most readily available and capable reserve force."

GLOBEILITY

"Vertical envelopment" is a white-glove name for the Fleet's new brass knuckles. It features heavily armed Marines in a unique global maneuver. Instead of storming a fortified beach, these Leathernecks surround it. Helicopters lift them from special assault ships to commanding points behind the enemy's back. For 10 years Marines have polished this method of capturing beachheads by air. Now a part of the fast-moving Fleet, these specialists bring powerful deterrent weight to bear... wherever Free World borders are threatened.

He replaces Col. Thomas E. Wood, USA-Ret.

RYAN FIREBEES STAR AGAIN AT SECOND "WM. TELL" MEET

The Air Force has selected Ryan Firebees as the exclusive targets for Project "William Tell II"—the second annual world-wide weapons meet to use free-flying jet targets for the purpose of testing pilots, planes, and missiles.

The Ryan Firebee—America's most widely used jet target and the hit of "William Tell I"—provides the most economical and realistic means of maintaining air defense weapons at combat readiness. Firebees stay "on station" for extended periods—permitting numerous attack sorties. And they can be used over and over again.

Pitted against the Firebees will be the top Air Defense Command squadrons, flying Convair

F-102, Lockheed F-104, Northrop F-89 and North American F-100 interceptors. They will fire deadly Falcon and Sidewinder guided missiles and Genie (atomic-type) rockets.

The advanced, new transonic Q-2C Firebee—now in production for the Air Force—has already set world's records by flying faster (mach .95), higher (59,800 feet), and longer (99½ minutes).

Ryan has led the field in the design, development, and production of jet target missiles for more than ten years. The Firebee is another outstanding example of Ryan's skill in blending aerodynamics, propulsion, and electronics knowledge to produce a superior product.

Eight ANG Units Cited For Readiness

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. EIGHT Air National Guard squadrons which have achieved high levels of operational readiness were honored this week by the National Guard Association at its 81st General Conference here.

The eight were designated by the National Guard Bureau for compiling the best operational readiness gains in the past year among Air Guard bases with their type aircraft. They are:

F-86D/L: 199th fighter interceptor squadron, Hawaii Air National Guard, Hickam AFB, Honolulu.

F-89: 114th fighter group (air defense), South Dakota ANG, Sioux Falls, S. D.

F-86H: 104th tactical fighter group, Massachusetts ANG, Westfield, Mass.

F-84F: 108th tactical fighter wing, New Jersey ANG, McGuire AFB, N. J.

RF-84F: (Three way tie). 153d tactical reconnaissance squadron, Mississippi ANG, Meridian, Miss; 160th tactical reconnaissance squadron, Alabama ANG, Montgomery, Ala., and 184th tactical reconnaissance squadron, Arkansas ANG, Ft. Smith, Ark.

Tactical support: 130th troop carrier squadron, West Virginia ANG, Charleston, W. Va.

Under Air Force standards, an "operationally ready" unit is one which has all its authorized aircraft and auxiliary equipment in shape to perform its assigned mission and whose personnel are qualified and motivated in techniques for accomplishing its mission.

However, because some elements governing operational readiness—such as availability of aircraft and other major equipment items—are outside the control of Air Guard commanders, units in the competition were judged primarily on the number of air crew members and support personnel operationally ready on August 31 compared with their authorized strength. They were rated also on tactical evaluations conducted by the Air Defense Command, Tactical Air Command, and Continental Air Command, and on flying safety programs, accident rates, and length of time since conversion to new aircraft types and missions.

The winning units were leaders in the over-all campaign which by August 31 had qualified two-thirds of the Air National Guard's flying personnel and 60 percent of its support personnel as operationally ready. Meanwhile, Air Guard units have on hand 92 percent of their mission equipment, with 69 percent of their aircraft rated operationally ready.
